

Lenten Icon Workshop Trinity Church, Princeton

Maureen McCormick of the Prosopon School of Iconology, will offer a Lenten workshop for beginning students of the ancient sacred art of iconography. Each student will complete an icon of St. Michael the Archangel using the same natural materials and techniques as have been used for centuries: carved wood boards prepared with gesso made from chalk and glue, finely ground clay, pure gold leaf, and ground mineral pigments in an emulsion made from egg yolk. As iconography is a spiritual discipline as much as a sacred art, the underlying theology and symbolism of the icon will be equally emphasized. Previous artistic experience is helpful but not necessary.

The workshop will consist of seven Tuesday evening sessions, plus two Saturdays (see daily schedule below). Step-by-step instructions and all necessary materials will be provided.

The Prosopon School of Iconology was founded by Vladislav Andrejev, who was born in St. Petersburg Russia where he attended Youth Art School, Tavrichesky Art College, the Fine Arts Academy and Polygraphic Institute. Unable to freely practice iconography in Russia at that time, Mr. Andrejev emigrated to the United States in 1980 and is widely regarded as the foremost iconographer in America. Maureen holds an MFA from the Tyler School of Art of Temple University, and has studied with Mr. Andrejev and other master iconographers of the Prosopon School for more than fifteen years.
